Quoted from Tamerat Zerhion's

"The art of Listening to Music"

Birritu No. 43

November - December 1988

The annals of history is repleted with brilliant scholars in Arts and Sciences. But there are very few real giants whose works are still monumental. In painting and sculptor Leonardo da Vinci has no peer. More recently Picasso will be remembered for his peculiar style of painting for many years to come. In physics Galileo Galilie and Newton have laid down the foundation. More recently, Einstein has pushed physics into the realm of cosmos and opened the secret for unleashing the unbelievable energy embodied in the atoms. In biology Pasteur Louis has laid down the cornerstone of micro-biology. In astronomy Copernicus has pinpointed the system of the universe. In industrial and bio-chemistry the number of Scientist who made contributions which revolutionized technology are in numberable. Beethoven singlehandedly dominates the musical world and is towering above all his contemporaries. Last but not least, shakespeare is immortal in the literary world.

Incidentally, how educated are we if we don't know how to listen to music composed by world renowned composers; make constructive comments on great works of painting and sculptors, and if we are totally ignorant of the literary world etc. An illiteracy campaign for the educateed uneducated seems to be in order.
